Introduction

This volume contains additions and corrections to the previously published bibliographies of the six New England states: Massachusetts (1976), Maine (1977), New Hampshire (1979), Vermont (1981), Rhode Island (1983), and Connecticut (1986). It adds more than 11,500 titles to the series, including some 8,200 works produced since the cutoff dates for those volumes. It extends comprehensive coverage for the six states to December 31, 1987, with nearly 500 additional entries for 1988 and early 1989.

This volume also lists works overlooked in compiling the original state bibliographies and a number of titles excluded under early editorial guidelines that later were modified. The coverage of biographical works for Massachusetts, Maine, and New Hampshire, for example, has been expanded to equal that in the Vermont, Rhode Island, and Connecticut volumes. Doctoral dissertations, listed here on a comprehensive basis, are included for the first time in the series. Also included for the first time are a number of selected masters' theses. More than 1,500 dissertations and theses are listed here.

With the exception of dissertations, which have come to be widely available as "on-demand" publications, and masters' theses, which are usually unpublished, this bibliography, like the others in the series, lists published writings—books, pamphlets, magazine and journal articles—about the history of the six New England states, their counties, cities, and towns, their people and institutions. With the exception of biographies, masters' theses, and a few other items to be mentioned below, this is also a comprehensive rather than selective bibliography. Within the editorial guidelines of the Committee for a New England Bibliography (CNEB), it includes all titles found in a systematic search of state and local history collections and numerous periodicals files.

The various works cited here were written by academic scholars, professional writers, and amateur historians. Some of the subjects dealt with are of broad, current interest to students, scholars, or general readers; others are of more local concern or reflect the interests of earlier generations of historians and their readers. Occasional foreign language publications, when found, have been listed.

In bringing these materials together, we make no qualitative judgment. Our purpose is to identify and make accessible the many scattered publications and to suggest the kinds of information that can be gleaned from them through careful use of the bibliography and its index of authors, subjects, and places. Our listings provide uniform bibliographical data: name of author, full title of the work, place and date of publication, and pagination. We provide a library location for each book and pamphlet entry and one for each dissertation and thesis found in a collection other than that of the university at which it was written.

Editorial Guidelines

Under the guidelines for the series, the writings listed here were produced as works of history or contain a significant historical dimension. To qualify as history, as distinct from contemporary chronicle, they must have been written at least a year after the event they describe. They must also deal primarily with events that occurred within one of the six New England states. Thus, the combat experiences of New England units and soldiers in wars that were fought mainly in other parts of the nation and world are excluded, while historical writings about political and social conditions in New England and any military events that may have occurred there during the same wars are included.

Certain categories of materials, with exceptions to be described below, have been ruled out by our guidelines: almanacs, directories, and guidebooks; government documents; historical articles published in newspapers; genealogies; maps and atlases; works of fiction; juvenile literature; and, originally, biographies and autobiographies.

"The exclusions, however," as former editor T. D. Seymour Bassett explained in his introduction to the Vermont volume, "are not absolute." We try to go beyond the form and determine the substance." Thus we now include both collected biographies and a substantial number of individual biographies and autobiographies that in our opinion contain significant materials about some aspect of state or local history. Although we exclude straight, tabular genealogies, we do include family histories.

While our general policy is to be comprehensive within these defined limits, there are a few categories in which we do not make a systematic search but nevertheless include items that have come to the attention of the editor. A notable example is that of newspaper articles. Although we do not search the many newspaper files that might contain an occasional historical article, we do list a certain number of such articles—especially articles in a series—that have come to light in our library searches.

Research Strategy and Procedures

Work on this volume began in early 1986 and extended through January 1989. In all of the previous bibliographies, a single editor had been almost solely responsible for conducting the research, recording and indexing the entries, and preparing the volumes for publication. In the present case, it was impossible for one person to accomplish all the tasks at hand: search major research libraries and local collections in each of the six states; identify both recently published titles and items overlooked or excluded from the original volumes; update the periodicals search; conduct a systematic search for relevant dissertation titles; and at the same time also do the research for Volume 7, New England: A Bibliography of Its History, which is being published simultaneously with this one.

The CNEB, therefore, voted to appoint "state editors" to assist in each state. This approach ultimately worked well in every state except Massachusetts, where the state editor found it necessary to resign his duties after the rest of the project was well advanced. The state editors in the other five states were: Joseph E. Coduri of Warwick, R.I., a book collector with strong interests in his state's history; Eric S. Flower of the University of Maine Special Collections, who had already done a great deal of bibliographical work on Maine history; Connell Gallagher, who had a similar background in the University of Vermont Special Collections; David L. Ruell of Ashland, N.H., a freelance architectural historian; and Connecticut historian Bruce P. Stark, of the Beinecke Library, Yale University, who shared responsibilities as Connecticut state editor with his wife, Patricia B. Stark, formerly of the Yale University Archives.

The state editors were briefed on CNEB guidelines and were given standard forms to record new entries. Most of them met regularly with the editor at the CNEB's semi-annual meetings and also were in contact with him by phone or letter as questions arose. Their primary task was to coordinate reviews of the state volumes. As a first step, most of them circulated sections of the bibliographies to local libraries, historical societies, and knowledgeable individuals, seeking suggestions for additional titles. There were many responses to the mailings. The state editors evaluated the suggestions and sent along their recommendations to the editor for final selection, being careful to include all of the data needed for citation and indexing. In most cases, the state editors also made extensive searches of their own in major libraries and local collections. They thus helped to identify many recently published titles as well as omissions and exclusions from the original volumes. They also supplied most of the masters' theses titles listed here.

In the absence of a state editor for Massachusetts, the editor, with help in the Boston area from a graduate assistant from the Boston University American and New England Studies Program, revisited a number of major Massachusetts collections, expanded the local library search well beyond what had been possible in the original work in the early 1970s, and added a number of biographical works, which had largely been excluded from the original volume. Outside of Massachusetts, the editor searched state historical society, state and private university, and large public library collections in each of the other states. The focus of the editor's search was on books and pamphlets published since the original cutoff dates and on periodicals not widely available outside the particular states.

This volume lists some 4,200 book and pamphlet titles. CNEB editors, in compiling the earlier bibliographies, had found shelf-by-shelf searches of state and local history collections to be the most productive means of identifying relevant book titles. In this case, library accessions records, organized chronologically, were used wherever possible to quickly identify recent writings. In other libraries, the editor usually worked first from shelf lists, which include all items pertaining to a particular locality or subject, and thus require more time to identify recent titles. Once identified from accessions records and shelf lists, the books and pamphlets were examined and then cited. Most libraries granted stack privileges, and those that did not were uniformly cooperative in paging materials.

Periodicals

Magazine and journal articles once again account for more than half of the entries in this bibliography, more than 6,000 titles in all. A number of national, regional, and local serials have been systematically searched throughout the series. These periodicals, while by no means the only ones cited in the series, have formed the core of our serials coverage. We have updated and expanded the search of these core materials as part of the work on each bibliography.

In compiling the present volume, a number of recent articles were identified through the use of several current bibliographical publications: America: History and Life, published in four parts each year by ABC-Clio; the American Historical Association's Writings on American History, published annually; and that organization's Recently Published Articles, which appears three times a year. Other compiled lists of recent articles, which appear regularly in such historical periodicals as the Journal of American History and the Journal of the Early Republic, were also useful. So were lists for particular states that are published from time to time in Historical New Hampshire, the Maine Historical Society Quarterly, and Vermont History. A review of the annual bibliographies of New England history published in the New England Quarterly from 1928 through 1966 yielded a number of articles that had been excluded from earlier volumes, as did a similar review of listings in the earlier volumes of Writings on American History, which date back to 1902. Several specialized bibliographies, including one by David Starbuck on the historical archaeology of the Northeast,[1] and the thematic bibliographies published in recent issues of the annual Dublin Seminar Proceedings, were useful on specific subjects.

Many of the periodicals cited in this volume are widely available; others are more difficult to find. Except for articles in a few local and ephemeral serials, nearly all of the periodical entries listed here were found in one or more of the following: New England state libraries and state historical societies; New England state and private university libraries; the Boston Public Library; and other research collections in the Boston, New Haven, and Worcester areas.

A basic tool for identifying libraries that own sets of a particular periodical is the five-volume Union List of Serials in Libraries of the United States and Canada (3d ed., 1965). Also useful in our search were two consortium lists, available on microfiche in member institutions, which list the periodical holdings of universities and colleges in the Boston and Amherst-Northampton, Mass., areas. A union list of serials in libraries in the Worcester, Mass., area was also useful,[2] as were OCLC records of periodical holdings in that national cataloging service's member libraries. Online Computer Library Center (OCLC) has hundreds of university, research and public libraries among its subscribers.

Dissertations

Most of the dissertations cited here were identified by searching the following bibliographical publications of University Microfilms, which is located in Ann Arbor, Michigan: Comprehensive Dissertation Index (CDI), published in series for 1861–

1972, 1973–1982, and annually since 1983; Dissertation Abstracts International (DAI), which is published monthly; and American Doctoral Dissertations, an annual publication. These are usually available in universities that have strong graduate programs. The dissertation titles in CDI are grouped under thousands of key words, including place names and the names of individuals. The DAI listings are organized by discipline, and those in American Doctoral Dissertations by discipline and institution. We searched the latter two publications under American Studies, Anthropology, Archaeology, Architecture, Economics, Education, Fine Arts, History, Literature, Music, Political Science, Religion, and other disciplines in the humanities and social sciences.

In our search, we also had access to another service of University Microfilms: computer printouts of dissertation titles containing specified key words, such as Connecticut, Boston, Hawthorne, and Puritan. We used printouts of this sort for each New England state. Similar in format and scope to the CDI listings, they yielded a few titles not found in CDI.

Some universities, including Harvard, have begun only in recent years to contribute complete information about dissertations to the University Microfilms program. We identified a number of important dissertation titles through our own search in the Harvard Archives. Other titles were found in the bibliographies of individual dissertations; in Warren F. Kuehl's Dissertations in History (1965 and 1972);[3] in an important bibliography of dissertations relating to early New England: Michael S. Montgomery's American Puritan Studies (1984);[4] and in published and manuscript bibliographies of dissertations pertaining to Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island history.[5]

The Montgomery bibliography describes in some detail a number of dissertations not abstracted in DAI. In this volume, we refer the reader wherever possible to DAI for the information contained in the abstract and, in many cases, an order number that can be used to purchase a photocopy or microfilm copy of a dissertation. In instances where a dissertation is listed in Montgomery and not in DAI, we refer to Montgomery for further information. We also refer to the published—usually revised—version of a dissertation when such is known to exist.

We were able to examine the originals of dissertations in the archives of a number of New England universities. We also found photocopies of some titles in other library collections. In other cases, the citations and data listed here were gathered from DAI and the other University Microfilms publications mentioned above, and from Montgomery, Kuehl, and OCLC cataloging records.

Theses

In planning the scope of this bibliography, CNEB members voted to include, along with dissertations, a limited number of "recommended" masters' theses. While recognizing that it would be impossible to compile a comprehensive listing within the time constraints of the project, the committee decided that the inclusion of some titles would add to the value of the bibliography. Theses in some cases represent the best or only available scholarship on a particular subject.

We thus have made a beginning here toward a list of masters' theses that pertain to New England state and local history. As mentioned, most of the titles cited were recommended by the state editors. The coverage is greater for some states than for others. The largest number is for Vermont, the only New England state lacking a university with a Ph.D. program in history. Most of the titles listed for that state were written at the University of Vermont. A number of published and manuscript bibliographies list additional theses on Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont.[6]

Format and Citations

This volume, like the six state bibliographies, is organized geographically. The states are treated in alphabetical order, with separate listings of state, county, and local entries. Works pertaining to more than one town appear under the appropriate county; those relating to more than one county are included in the state sections. The "see also" references at the end of many county, city, and town listings are a guide to these boundary-spanning materials.

In this volume, the city and town sections list only those communities for which entries have been recorded. Similarly, the index lists only places that are the subjects of entries and "see also" references. Readers looking for complete listings of cities and towns and more complete listings of places within cities and towns should refer to the individual state volumes.

Under each geographical heading, entries are arranged alphabetically. Works by the same author are listed in alphabetical order by title, followed by any titles by that author and a collaborator. A dash at the beginning of an entry means that the work was written by the author of the preceding entry. Authors' names are listed as they appear on title pages or as determined from sources such as the National Union Catalog (NUC) and Library of Congress and OCLC cataloging. Thus, if the title page provides only a middle initial, and the middle name is later found in one of these other sources, we supply the middle name.

Author and corporate-author entries have been preferred in most cases. Edited and compiled works, however, are given a title entry, unless it is clear from the text that a "compiler" should in fact be regarded as an author. Otherwise, the editor's or compiler's name follows the title.

Titles or imprints, when not shown on the title page or verso, appears in brackets. Where there is more than one edition, the most recent or best one is cited, and the date of the first edition, if known, appears in parentheses after the title. Pagination indicates the last numbered page; substantial unnumbered pages are shown in brackets.

In this volume and in Volume 7, we provide a library location for each book and pamphlet entry and for copies of dissertations and theses owned by libraries other than those of the universities and colleges where they were written. We cite wherever possible a major in-state collection. Other collections cited, in order of preference, are: local in-state collections; libraries in other New England states; the Library of Congress; and, in a few cases where a work is known to exist but is not known to be in any of the above collections, another non-New England library. Standard library symbols are used. For a list of those cited in this volume, see Location Symbols.

Prior to the publication of the Rhode Island volume in 1983, we supplied locations only for books and pamphlets not listed in any of the various editions of the NUC. That publication, however, is not readily accessible to some of our readers; it has become increasingly cumbersome to search; and it sometimes fails to list locations that most of our readers would find useful. We continue to check our book and pamphlet listings against the NUC's listings and provide a plus sign (+) to identify titles found there. Readers who wish to consult that source for other library locations may find the effort rewarding.

We also have made use of OCLC cataloging records in this volume to verify citations and help to identify library holdings. OCLC is used by a number of large libraries, and we have found it easier and more productive to use than recent editions of the NUC. OCLC provides bibliographical information on a significant number of book and pamphlet titles cited in this volume, especially the more recent ones. In many cases, it also lists a sizable number of libraries that own a particular title.

Corrections

In cases where an entry in a previous volume contained erroneous information or has become outdated by a new and revised edition of a work, we provide a new entry. Along with the bibliographical data, we insert a note stating that the entry replaces a particular citation in the corresponding state volume.

Index

The index lists authors, editors, and compilers and also provides access to scores of different subjects. It lists place names in each state that are the subjects of entries in this volume. Readers seeking additional information about local place names should consult the indexes of the six state volumes.

Acknowledgments

A great many individuals and organizations assisted the editor and the state editors. It would be impossible to recognize them all individually. Acknowledgment should go, however, to the library staffs of the following institutions: American Antiquarian Society, the Berkshire Atheaeum (Pittsfield, Mass.), Boston Athenaeum, Boston College, Boston Public Library, Boston University, Clark University, Connecticut Historical Society, Connecticut State Library, Dartmouth College Archives, Essex Institute, Harvard College Archives, Maine Historical Society, Maine State Library, Massachusetts State Library, New Bedford (Mass.) Free Public Library, New England Historic Genealogical Society, New Hampshire Historical Society, New Hampshire State Library, New Haven Colony Historical Society, Old Sturbridge Village, Portsmouth (N.H.) Athenaeum, Rhode Island Historical Society, Springfield (Mass.) City Library, the Sturgis Library (Barnstable, Mass.), Vermont Historical Society, Worcester (Mass.) Public Library, and the main campus libraries of the universities of Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, and Vermont.

Boston University's Academic Computing Center again provided valuable services. William Marshall, formerly of that facility's staff, continued to serve as programming consultant. Chris Kittle programmed the final copy and supervised its production. Computerization of the series began with the Rhode Island volume in 1983.

Jennifer Phillips, a graduate student in Boston University's American and New England Studies Program, was the editor's graduate assistant during three semesters in 1986 and 1987 and also spent three summers working full-time for the project. She helped track down missing data, assisted with the serials search, checked book titles against NUC and OCLC listings, searched for recently published book titles in a number of Boston-area libraries, and helped to proofread the entries and index. Michael Bedeau served as graduate assistant during three semesters in 1987 and 1988. Barbara Nachtigall, an employee of Boston University's Archaeology Department, assisted with final proofreading. She previously had worked as a research assistant in the preparation of the Connecticut volume.

Future Additions to the Series

With the publication of volumes 7 and 8 in 1989, the CNEB has completed the task it set for itself in the early 1970s of compiling comprehensive bibliographies of the history of New England and each of the six New England states. In order to preserve and increase the value of the nearly two decades of scholarship that have gone into the series, the committee at this writing was pursuing plans to continue the updating process. As CNEB chairman A. L. Morris states in the preface to Volume 7, we believe we will be able to publish a volume of further additions and corrections to the state and regional bibliographies by 1994 or 1995. The present editor expects to continue the work on a part-time basis. Suggestions for additions and corrections may be sent to: Roger Parks, Nathanael Greene Papers, Rhode Island Historical Society, 110 Benevolent Street, Providence, RI 02906.

Index

This index includes authors, editors, and compilers, as well as subjects and places. The references are to entry numbers, not pages. Library of Congress subject headings usually have been preferred. If there is a bibliography for a particular subject, it is listed first and is separated from other entry numbers by a semicolon. We provide vital dates and other data to distinguish persons with identical names. General works of state history are listed under headings such as "Connecticut--histories."

We alphabetize word by word rather than letter by letter (East Windsor before Eastham). Corporate authors divided by a period (such as Maine. State Library) precede names of institutions not so divided (such as Maine Historical Society).

The only geographical names in this index are those that are subjects of writings listed in the bibliography. See the six state volumes in this series for complete lists of counties, cities, and towns. The indexes to the state volumes also identify a number of other place names.

Headings with many entries, such as "Churches, Congregational," are usually subdivided by states. In other cases, the best way to find material about a particular subject in one state or locality is first to become familiar with the range of entry numbers for that state or locality.
